

For those of you who have ever used Kahoot games in our classroom, I've learned two things in the last 24 hours while challenging my kids to a game:

1. You can make each game a "challenge" and they can do it from home. (Normally everyone needs to be together for this, but issuing a "challenge" allows them to do it without all being together.)
2. Like many websites currently, we have FREE access to their premium functions.

I've had 5 kids participate in my challenge thus far. It tells me what percentage each child is getting right, who isn't finished yet, and who needs help with the skill the challenge covers. I made it a challenge rather than an assignment and hope to be able to give a prize to the winners (anyone who made a 100%).

Have a great day!
